LEGACY HOUSING*

*1901 Glasgow International Exhibition.

The Glasgow Port Sunlight Cottages were built as a showpiece example of workers housing for a future Glasgow. Designed by Glasgow Architect James Miller, they now they stand alone in Kelvingrove Park.

2014 Legacy Housing:

The Athletes Village will provide accommodation and facilities for 6,500 competitors and officials.

“After the Games, the Village area will become a vibrant neighbourhood, a flagship for the regeneration of Glasgow’s East End and a visible reminder of the legacy of the Games”.

-Councillor Steven Purcell,
Leader of Glasgow City Council

“Ultimately, the masterplan proposes a new inner city housing neighbourhood for Glasgow, maximising the re-use of brownfield land for residential development and amenity use. Post Games, it will provide a mix of private housing for sale or rent, and social housing to meet the needs of the community in the East End of Glasgow. It is the largest and most ambitious of the new housing neighbourhood projects being developed in Glasgow.”

-scottisharchitecture.com

“But of the 1,500 houses, 1,200 will be for private sale, while only 300 (or 20%) will be for socially rented housing. The question of who exactly will benefit from the ‘Legacy’ is important.”

*Hello friends,
I write this postcard from the new Euro-African roundabout.
Here is very beautiful.
Finally there is an international territory in which the peoples and cultures meet.
A roundabout does not belong to anyone, but anyone can go through.
There is also a new sea, where fragile underwater ecosystems found a new life.
Here people are smiling and does not remember when the continents were separated from the sea and racism.
Is a place to dream. Come and visit us!!*
